

"BLOODY MONDAY" AT HARVARD

Special to The New York Times.

New York Times (1857-1922); Oct 6, 1903;

ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2006)

pg. 1

"BLOODY MONDAY" AT HARVARD

Fierce Rush Between Freshmen and Sophomores, Resulting in Bruises and Arrests.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 5.—"Bloody Monday" night was celebrated at Harvard to-night with a fierce rush between the freshmen and sophomores, a score of damaging fights between upper and lower classmen, a bombardment with eggs of a whole line of Harvard Square store windows, and the arrest of two students, who were held in $100 bail to await trial for riotous conduct to-morrow morning.

Despite the superior forces of the freshmen, the rush was led by the sophomores, who tore up things generally. Clothes were torn in shreds from the backs of the contestants, black eyes and bruises were seen everywhere, and every one received a liberal smudge of mother earth, which was worked into a fine paste under a thousand feet.

After the rush the classes adjourned to Massachusetts Avenue and began to "rough house" the passing street cars. A squadron of big Cambridge policemen made its appearance, however, and with difficulty checked them in their mad career, but not until some one had produced a quantity of eggs and bombarded freshmen, spectators, and windows.